Faculty's Insights

Fondness of the 'Paws'

Innocence top-notch, tenderness heart melting, loyalty untethered, love- endless and eternal, a four pawed fur entered my life 8 yrs ago and changed my life forever. Dogs, as they are commonly known as, are descendants of modern day wolves (Canis lupus), are domesticated to be man's best friend. The most important and priceless emotion they share with man is 'understanding'. Understanding every emotion of man and standing by and for him. In return, they expect only an element of love and unwavering attention for a few minutes. For these few minutes, they wait and long all day. In the never - ending rat race that man unconsciously runs, where love and compassion are scarce, dogs are a reminder that life is beautiful, despite the flaws. Embrace and elate the mutual connection with these voiceless, pawed friends of man.

Due to heavy rains for continuous days in Kota, our volleyball court wore a watery crown—every jump was a splash, every serve a dive down! With frogs as cheerleaders and puddles for nets, Aqua-Volley is surely the funniest game yet!

The Potter's Wheel of Childhood

A lump of clay lies silent—soft, unformed, waiting.

So too does a child, eyes wide with wonder, hands reaching for the world.

It is the potter who bends close, hands steady yet gentle, guiding the shapeless toward form. Parents, teachers, guardians—each one leaves fingerprints on the child's being. Sometimes those prints are light, barely seen, a touch of guidance. Sometimes they press too deeply, shaping cracks that may never smooth out.

The wheel spins. That is society, school, culture—the endless rotation on which the child rests. If the clay is not centered, it wobbles, collapses, falls apart. And so balance is taught: discipline with freedom, tradition with curiosity, duty with dream.

But clay cannot remain clay. The kiln awaits—the fire of life. Heat that threatens to destroy, but in truth, strengthens. Tests, failures, heartbreaks—each one bakes the soul, hardening resilience, turning fragility into endurance.

Not every vessel emerges flawless. Some crack under pressure, others warp. Yet even a chipped pot can carry water, even a crooked bowl can cradle seeds. Imperfection, too, holds worth.

Then comes the glaze—values, creativity, individuality. Education adds color, morals add shine, culture weaves patterns across the surface. A child becomes not just functional, but beautiful in their uniqueness.

And when the pot is done, it carries forward. It holds sustenance, flowers, stories. A well-shaped child becomes a vessel of wisdom, a bearer of kindness, a keeper of light for generations to come.

We are all clay.

We are all potters.

And the world itself is one great wheel, forever turning.
